

How to use the Internet to find information?

- by reading an individual's blog or newsgroup postings
- by looking up an individual's name and identity in an Internet directory
- by reading an individual's email, IM, or text messages
- by monitoring and conducting surveillance on employees
- by wiretapping wireline and wireless communication lines
- by asking an individual to complete a registration form on a website
- by recording an individual's actions as they navigate the web with a browser, usually using cookies
- by using spyware, keystroke loggers, and similar methods.

The screenshot displays the JETRO website interface. At the top, there's a browser window showing the URL <http://www.jetro.go.jp/>. The website header includes the JETRO logo and the text "Japan External Trade Organization". A navigation menu contains links: Home, Investing in Japan, Cool Japan, Business Opportunities, Reports and Statistics, and About Us. A search bar with "Google Custom Search" is also present. Below the header, the main content area features a "JETRO Worldwide" section with a world map and a link to "Overseas Offices with Websites". To the right, a large banner titled "Investing in Japan" with the "INVEST JAPAN" logo encourages discovering business advantages in Japan, accompanied by an image of business professionals in a meeting. The lower section is divided into three columns: "Quick Links" (Online Bookshop, E-Mail Newsletter, Business Matching Database, Library, Institute of Developing Economies), "Latest News" (with a "more" button) featuring three press releases from December, November, and October 2009, and "Special Feature" (with a "more" button) highlighting attractive sectors for investment like medical care and Japan's aging society, illustrated with an image of a family.
